

Harvard Referencing: a guide 2016

You are expected to include citations and references in your academic work and you should follow the Harvard referencing style in:

Pears, R. and Shields, G. (2016) Cite them right: the essential referencing guide. 10th edn. London: Palgrave.

www.citethemrightonline.com

This guide will show you how to reference:

- Books and e-books
- Journals and e-journals
- Web pages including NICE guidance and Cochrane reviews

For all other types of material, please consult Cite them right in print or online.

Citations and referencing

Citations

Citations are included within the text of your assignment at points where you have used someone else's work. This could be a quotation, a paraphrase or a summary of your source. Your citation always includes the author and year of the source.

Examples

Dimond (2013) explains the legal framework of midwifery.

Exercise could help prevent some cases of Type 2 diabetes (Diabetes UK, 2016).

References

References provide your reader with full details for each of the sources you have cited. References are listed at the end of your assignment, in alphabetical order.

Examples

Diabetes UK (2016) Type 2 diabetes: know your risk. Available at: <https://www.diabetes.org.uk/Guide-to-diabetes/What-is-diabetes/Know-your-risk-of-Type-2-diabetes/> (Accessed 16 August 2016).
